A+++++++ 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Another great book by Rottman! By al Must have if you are a serious model builder and want to know what all that equipment is, how they wore it, why they wore it and what colors they are. The author is a meticulous researcher and historian as well as a retired professional Soldier. Ron Volstad has done his usual superior job on the illustrations as well and there are several color plates lavishly illustrated. Of special note, the color plates are described with usually a paragraph or so for each item called out. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. A good beginning to build on By Kenneth Smith, II This is a great modeler's aide for detailing equipment, a beginning work to help those new to the military miniature hobby. Becoming skilled starts with references and this is an ideal start to those wanting to have that little extra in their work or begin a collection of military items.

The field equipment of the German Army in World War II was closely related to that used throughout World War I and earlier, yet it was of relatively light weight, ruggedly constructed, well designed, functional, and generally of a high quality, though this deteriorated in the later war years. A high degree of design standardisation was maintained in most categories of equipment, though materials and their colours often varied widely. There were also many different specialisations for the various arms of service as well as theatres of combat, such as the Afrikakorps in the Western Desert. This title investigates all manner of German combat equipments throughout World War II, from belt buckles to magazine pouches.

From the Publisher Packed with specially commissioned artwork, maps and diagrams, the Men-at-Arms series is an unrivalled illustrated reference on the history, organisation, uniforms and equipment of the world's military forces, past and present. About the Author Gordon L Rottman entered the US Army in 1967, volunteered for Special Forces and completed training as a weapons specialist.
